Dear Al:

Thank you for your 4 November letter concerning the

The question of centralization versus decentralization is not new, and has been studied many times. However, since our requirements, equipments, and cost factors are continuously changing, it is well that we periodically relook at the distribution and balance of our exploitation tasking and resources. I believe that from any such examination we should determine and fully understand potential manpower economies, overall costs, and the quality of exploitation performance serving the various needs.

I am asking the Intelligence Community Staff to have an examination accomplished of our exploitation tasking by 1 April 1975. The examination will encompass the following:

1. An inventory of existing exploitation and exploitation support resources, functions and needs of the relevant photo-interpretation centers, including those of NPIC, DIA, CIA, Army, Navy, Air Force, SAC CINCPAC, CINCLANT and CINCEUR.
2. The advantages and disadvantages, relevant to costs and needs, of transferring some or all of the NPIC routine workload to DOD centers.
3. The advantages and disadvantages of further centralizing exploitation resources and functions.

Sincerely,

SIGNED

W. E. Colby
